Shawna Virago's newest offering is one of those stripped back pieces that's immediately compelling, thanks the lone acoustic guitar along with beautifully wailing vocals, longing for the sweet memory of the past.

Arguably reminiscent of Bob Dylan of the 90s, 'Last Night Sugar' is the second release from the album, 'Heaven Sent Delinquent', offering more of those intimate and mythical arrangements along with lyrical content that's designed to pull the heartstrings.

A transgender musician, Shawna Virgo started performing in the early 1990s, being the voice for the transgender community and the underdog of society. Fusing folk with punk is her speciality which earned her a seal of approval from major music tastemakers over the years.

Named the top 25 Hot Femmes by Shewired magazine, her advocated song 'Objectified' was hailed one of the top transgender anthems. Her music video for single, 'Transsexual Dominatrix', was screened at more than 30 film festivals throughout North America and Europe, and was awarded Best Music Video at New York's CineKink Festival.

'Heaven Sent Delinquent' is now available on CDBaby, iTunes and Amazon...but for now, have a first taste of the album – have a listen to 'Last Night Sugar.'
